SEE where the police gets after | the feller which is running the Russian ballet," Barnett Zapp said as he glanced over the bill of fare in Wasserbauer's Restaurant. "Some theayter managers is very lucky that way," Louis Birsky, the real estater, said.

"How lucky?" Zapp demanded. "Because what the police calls bad, looks awful good to a whole lot of peofront becomes right away as valuable as two perfect matched pearls from ten carats apiece," Birsky said. "The next time I get roped in for such a thing I would go to an optician not a speculator and buy a pair of hundred dollar field glasses, and stand up for a dollar in the back of the gallery. I could save a lot of money that way.'

"And was it so bad like the police said?" Zapp asked. "Well, I'll tell you," Birsky replied. "You weuldn't think it to look at a policeman what a delicate disposition such a feller has got. A New York policeman will get red over something in a theayter which for years respectable young fellers in the old country has been taking their mothers to see and neither of 'em turned a hair, y understand. Also down at Coney Island a policeman will hide his face and holler for the police because a lady has got on a bathing suit which if one of them actresses were it in a 'Follies' show where they walk across planks over the heads of the so-called two dollar sents, y'understand, compared with the other ladies in the show you would think she was dressed for starting out in an open oltermobile to call on her husband's relations."

"Was the show so bad like the police said?" Zapp inquired once more.

"Well, I'll tell you," Birsky repeated, "when the police receives a letter that a show is immoral and they should please look the matter up and oblige, Zapp, they try to put themselves in the place of the average theayter goer; but the only thing is they got an idee that people which goes most to the theayter was never in such a place before in their lives. In particular, when it comes to a dollars aplece at the box office if they tion.' was for sale there, the police thinks that excepting the ushers everybody in the theayter is visiting in New where they still got an idee that dolsign in women's outer garments, y'

King' till the curtain goes up and shows the inside of the harem with all the ladies not yet dressed to receive company."

"Naturally people from the country seeing such a thing would get a shock," Zapp commented.

"They would if they was there," Birsky said, "but actresses and actors is got to go a long way to shock a New York audience. In fact, Zapp, if the police knew their business they would arrest the two front rows of a New York audience on looks alone, for the bad effect the faces has got on the morals of the actors and actresses. However, Zapp, supposing that the people which goes to see the Russian ballet is as innocent as the police claims, Zapp, it wouldn't make no difference anyhow, because a ballet is like the deef and dumb language, Zapp, people has got to study it for years before they know what it means. In fact, Zapp, if the police continues to find this here Russian ballet is immoral, Zapp, you would see advertisements in the paper:
